Den luna di augustus 2012, Gabinete Eman a yama un Dialogo Social riba energia pa asina stipula e rebaho di awa y coriente. Esaki a tuma lugar despues cu WEB a anuncia un rebaho substancial di prijs di awa y ELMAR a keda keto riba un posibel rebaho tambe di coriente. Gabinete Eman a haci uso di e oportunidad cu mayoria gremio comercial y sindical tabata den sala pa laga nan firma un protocol den cual nan a bay di acuerdo tambe pa Gabinete Eman por realisa e proyecto di e dos parke di molina di biento na Urirama. Un acto di manipulacion cu hopi di esnan cu a participa den e Dialogo Social riba energia kizas no ta ni realisa.

Gabinete Eman awor kier laga musta na Pueblo cu ta Parlamento tin e ultimo palabra den e decision si e di dos parke di molina di biento ta bin na Urirama. Pero esaki ta puro manipulacion. Pete Rose: Hits record safe from Jeter Pete Rose is a self-admitted big fan of Derek Jeter, but the all-time hits leader has done some math and says the New York Yankees shortstop will not touch his record.

Rose told the website Sports on Earth this week that not only is time not on Jeter's side -- he's 38 years old and 952 hits shy of tying Rose -- but the Yankees also don't have the flexibility to move him to another position should Jeter remain productive at the plate.

"I don't think he will break the record," Rose said. "First of all, I don't think he wants to leave the Yankees. And the Yankees, they're about winning. Jeter had a great year this year, but he's what? Thirty-eight years old? And he's a shortstop? How many 40-year-old shortstops you see walking around? Not too many, right?"

"And they can't put him at third because A-Rod's there. They can't put him at second 'cause [Robinson] Cano's there. He don't help them in left field -- he's got to be in the center of things, you know what I mean? What are they going to do? Put him at first base?"

Jeter led the majors with 216 hits in the regular season, his 17th, all with the Yankees. Heading into Wednesday's Game 3 of the AL Division Series against Baltimore, Jeter has 3,304 career hits, good for 10th on the all-time list.

Rose, who was banned from baseball for gambling on the game when he was manager of the Cincinnati Reds, retired in 1986 at age 45 with 4,256 hits. Rose broke Ty Cobb's record the year before he retired.

Jeter, Rose said, "had a great year this year, but you think he can do that again? At 39? A shortstop? Let's say he does it again. Let's say he gets 200 more hits next year. And let's say he gets 200 more hits when he's 40, though I don't think he can. OK, can he get 200 more hits when he's 41? You think he can?"

Rose continued, "I don't think he can get 200 more hits at 41, but let's say he does. OK, now he's 42. He's gonna get 200 more hits then? At 42? Let me tell you, I've been there, the body locks up. Jeter's a great hitter ... but he's gonna get 200 hits when he's 42? I don't think he will. And even if he does all that, he's still 150 hits short."

11 testified against Lance Armstrong

Lance Armstrong challenged the U.S. Anti-Doping Agency to name names and say what it had on him.

On Wednesday, it did.

The anti-doping body revealed a group of 11 former Armstrong teammates -- some loyal, some estranged -- who each provided evidence of drug use on the U.S. Postal Service team. USADA Chief Executive Travis Tygart called it "the most sophisticated, professionalized and successful doping program that sport has ever seen."

USADA will deliver its reasoned decision against Armstrong later Wednesday, a summary of the facts it used to hand him a lifetime suspension and erase his titles. The organization has banned the seven-time Tour de France winner from competition for life and declared his victories null and void.

In a news release previewing the decision, Tygart said it would include more than 1,000 pages of evidence. He listed 11 of Armstrong's former teammates, including George Hincapie, Floyd Landis and Tyler Hamilton, as among those providing evidence that led to the sanction.

Tygart said the evidence shows the code of silence that dominated cycling has been shattered.

"It took tremendous courage for the riders on the USPS Team and others to come forward and speak truthfully," he said. "It is not easy to admit your mistakes and accept your punishment. But that is what these riders have done for the good of the sport."

Armstrong's attorney, Tim Herman, called the report "a one-sided hatchet job -- a taxpayer funded tabloid piece rehashing old, disproved, unreliable allegations based largely on axe-grinders, serial perjurers, coerced testimony, sweetheart deals and threat-induced stories."

Aware of the criticism it has faced from Armstrong and his legion of followers, Tygart insisted USADA handled this case under the same rules as any other. He pointed out that Armstrong was given the chance to take his case to arbitration and he declined, choosing to accept the sanctions instead.

"We focused solely on finding the truth without being influenced by celebrity or non-celebrity, threats, personal attacks or political pressure because that is what clean athletes deserve and demand," Tygart said.

In delivering the report to the International Cycling Union, Tygart called for the federation to create a meaningful program to help clean up the sport.

The USADA report was widely expected to pull together and amplify allegations that have followed Armstrong ever since he beat cancer and won the Tour for the first time. At various times and in different forums, Landis, Hamilton and others have said that Armstrong encouraged doping on his team and used banned substances himself.

While the arguments about Armstrong will continue among sports fans -- and there is still a question of whether USADA or UCI has ultimate control of taking away his Tour titles -- the new report puts a cap on the official investigations. Armstrong was cleared of criminal charges in February after a federal grand jury probe that lasted about two years.

Tygart said evidence from 26 people, including 15 riders with knowledge of the U.S. Postal Service Team's doping activities, provided material for the report. It was with the USPS team that Armstrong won all but one of his Tour titles from 1999-2005.

Other cyclists named in the news release were Frankie Andreu, Michael Barry, Tom Danielson, Levi Leipheimer, Stephen Swart, Christian Vande Velde, Jonathan Vaughters and David Zabriskie.

In a letter sent to USADA attorneys Tuesday, Herman dismissed any evidence provided by Landis and Hamilton, calling them "serial perjurers and have told diametrically contradictory stories under oath."

Hincapie's role in the investigation could be more damaging, as he was one of Armstrong's closest and most loyal teammates through the years.

"Two years ago, I was approached by U.S. federal investigators, and more recently by USin these matters," the cyclist said in a statement published shortly after USADA's release. "I would have been much more comfortable talking only about myself, but understood that I was obligated to tell the truth about everything I knew. So that is what I did."

Hincapie's two-page statement did not mention Armstrong by name.

Tygart said all the evidence in the Armstrong case and the cases of six other riders targeted in USADA's investigation would be made available on the agency's website later Wednesday.

Two other players in the Postal team's circle, Dr. Michele Ferrari and Dr. Garcia del Moral, also received lifetime bans as part of the case.

Three other members of the USPS team will take their cases to arbitration. They are team director Johan Bruyneel, team doctor Pedro Celaya and team trainer Jose "Pepe" Marti.

Armstrong chose not to pursue the case and instead accepted the sanction, though he has persistently argued that the USADA system was rigged against him, calling the agency's effort a "witch hunt" that used special rules it doesn't follow in all its other cases.

The UCI has asked for details of the case before it decides whether to sign off on the sanctions. The federation has 21 days to appeal the case to the Court of Arbitration for Sport.

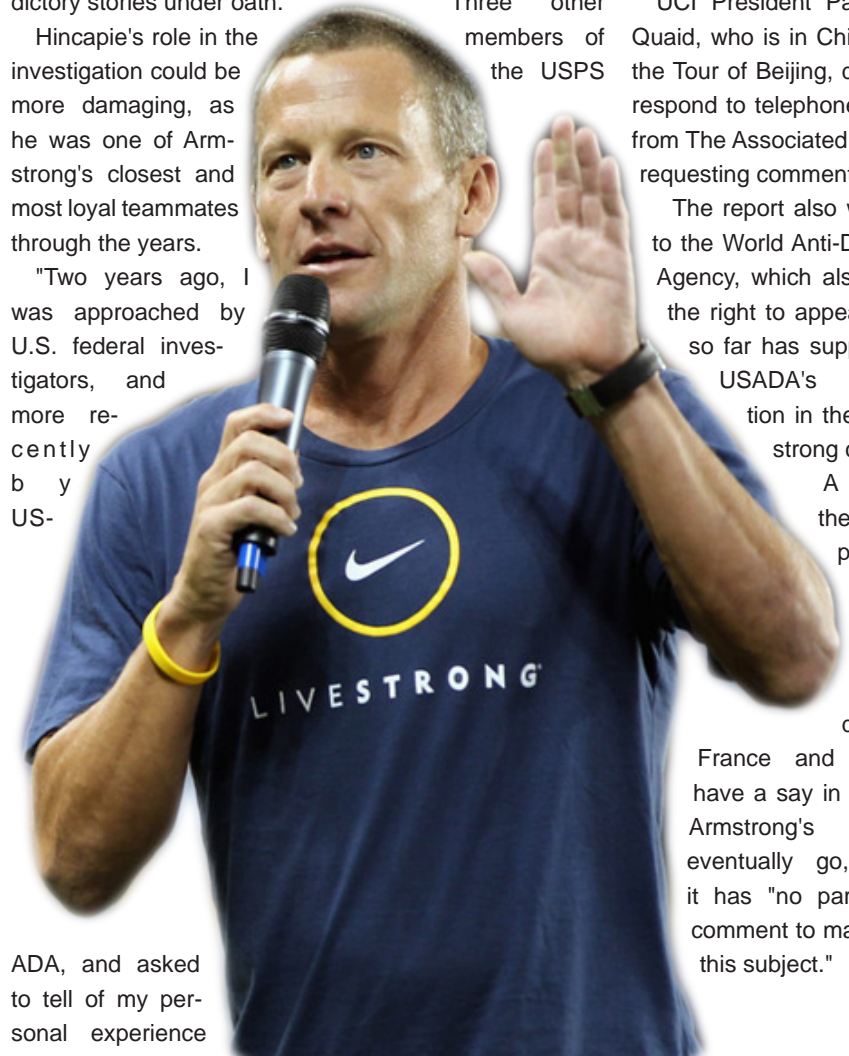

USADA has said it doesn't need UCI's approval and Armstrong's penalties already are in place.

UCI President Pat McQuaid, who is in China for the Tour of Beijing, did not respond to telephone calls from The Associated Press requesting comment.

The report also will go to the World Anti-Doping Agency, which also has the right to appeal, but so far has supported USADA's position in the Armstrong case.

A S O , the company that runs the Tour de

France and could have a say in where Armstrong's titles eventually go, said it has "no particular comment to make on this subject."

Player wants Strasburg on roster

The Washington Nationals' decision to shut down Stephen Strasburg apparently still is not sitting well with at least one of his teammates.

An unnamed Nationals player told FoxSports.com that Washington would own a two-game lead over the St. Louis Cardinals in the NL Division Series if Strasburg were on the roster.

Washington won the series opener despite a shaky outing from 21-game winner Gio Gonzalez but lost Game 2 in St. Louis as the Cardinals pounded Nationals starter Jordan Zimmermann.

"If we had (Strasburg), we'd be up 2-0," the anonymous player told FoxSports.com.

Strasburg's season ended prematurely in early September as the Nationals stuck to their previously stated plan of limiting the 24-year-old to fewer than 160 innings this season, his first full campaign since undergoing Tommy John surgery in 2010. The decision to shut down Strasburg has been hotly debated throughout the season, especially since the Nationals finished with the best record in the majors and clinched the franchise's first postseason berth since 1981. Wednesday's Game 3 marks the first time since 1933 that the city of Washington has hosted a postseason game.

Strasburg was vital to the Nationals' success this season, going 15-6 with a 3.16 ERA while recording 197 strikeouts in 159 1/3 innings. Although he admittedly was unhappy about being shut down, Strasburg said Tuesday that he has accepted the team's decision. "I'm still pretty upset," he told reporters. "I'm kind of past that. It's done with. There's nothing you can do. I could sit here and be upset and not be a good teammate, but I don't want to be that type of guy. I want to pull for these guys and make sure that everybody knows that I'm with them, even though I'm not out there playing."

The Nationals still boast a strong rotation without Strasburg, a group led by Gonzalez, Zimmermann and Game 3 starter Edwin Jackson. But Washington's decision to leave Strasburg off the postseason roster almost certainly will be lamented if the Nationals fail to win the World Series.

"We've got to win it," the unnamed player told FoxSports.com. "We've got to win it to make it go away."

Gonzalez struggled with his command in Game 1, walking seven over five innings and not factoring in the decision in Washington's 3-2 victory. Zimmermann, who posted a 2.94 ERA during the regular season, was even less effective in Game 2, allowing five runs over just three innings in a 12-4 loss.

"(Strasburg) would have lengthened out our rotation to the point where teams can't stay with us," the player told FoxSports.com.

The top overall pick in the 2009 draft, Strasburg was outstanding as a rookie the following season before suffering a torn ligament in his elbow. The right-hander returned to make one start in 2011, and Nationals general manager Mike Rizzo declared early this season that Strasburg's innings would be limited -- regardless of whether Washington made the postseason.

Strasburg acknowledged Tuesday that despite lobbying at one point to return for the postseason, he realizes that the Nationals likely won't take that risk.

"It's their call," he said. "It'd be pretty reckless to have me get on the mound and get going now after not even getting on the mound for a month. I talked to them about it for the week after that, but they were pretty firm. Now it's to the point where I don't think it would be smart for anybody to do that."
